JORDAN VOGEL

Jordan Vogel began his career in the construction industry starting out as a laborer and later joining a demolition crew. After a stint driving materials between job sites, he ultimately learned the trades of drywall and masonry. But the story didn't end there...

Jordan's eclectic background includes being a professional classical flutist where he performed on many stages, including at Carnegie Hall. An entrepreneur twice over, Jordan also founded and ran two successful small businesses. And then he decided to check out the corporate world.

Stops in corporate America included serving as VP of Marketing for Berkshire Hathaway's Executive Jet Management and as Director at Cintrifuse, the tech startup catalyst focused on making Greater Cincinnati the #1 startup hub in the Midwest. After Cintrifuse Jordan joined the Cincinnati USA Regional Chamber as their VP of Talent Initiatives, where he built the Chamber's talent pillar of work and also held the role of VP Membership Sales & Engagement and Corporate & Community Events.

Jordan returned to the construction industry in 2020 as the Executive Director of Allied Construction Industries (ACI). Established in 1929, ACI is a not-for-profit trade association serving the Cincinnati regions commercial construction industry. With 500+ members who employ over 25,000 people, ACI is focused on delivering workforce solutions that solve talent challenges, engaging in industry advocacy, and providing networking opportunities for its members. ACI also serves as an umbrella to 12 partnership associations, including the Cincinnati Division of the Associated General Contractors (AGC) of Ohio.

Jordan is a member of the Associated General Contractors of America board of directors, Spirit of Construction board of directors, Cincinnati Public Schools Business Advisory Council, and the SWACCA board of directors. He lives in Cincinnati with his wife Liz, and son Samuel, who is studying at the University of Cincinnati.
